PROJECTS

GRAPHICAL RESERVATION
Working in a team of four, we set out to build a proof-of-concept application allowing users to make a reservation for a specific table at their restaurant of choice using Handlebars, Express, and MySQL. My primary contributions included database architecture, establishment of server routes, handling session data, and implementing the dynamic floorplan functionality.

MORE THAN A GAME
Tasked with incorporating third-party APIs into a novel concept, my team built an application allowing users to search for a college football team's schedule, choose a game from the results, and populate a list of local attractions and other events taking place during the weekend of the chosen game through a series of cascading fetch calls. I lead the JavaScript development, including API calls and data parsing.

SUMMARY

After enjoying a successful career working as a paralegal, I recently decided to embark on a new challenge to become a web developer. While my role and responsibilities in my recent position continued to expand, I realized that I wanted to spend more time focusing on the aspects of my job that I enjoyed and excelled at the most - working through technical questions and logic problems and expanding on opportunities to be more creative. With a skill set directly transferable from my legal background and the foundation I have worked to build in Ohio State University's Full-Stack Program, I have already found web development to be a great personal fit early on in my new career trajectory.

Dealing primarily with oil and gas matters, I have assisted hundreds of landowners in the negotiation of comprehensive leases and easement agreements and helped develop and implement winning strategies in complex litigation in state, federal, and appellate courts. Most recently, I oversaw the management of a putative class-action trespass case with over 1,000 members and encompassing roughly 30,000 acres of affected land.

I look forward to bringing my attention to detail, eagerness to learn, and ability to balance independent work and collaboration to a new environment where I can both push myself and contribute to the development of innovative and useful applications.
